DESCENT INTO CHAOS

Back in 2008 we ran a two part article entitled "Storm Warning" that predicted a confluence of interrelated dangers that would inevitably cause worldwide disaster and chaos. In 2011 we featured an article entitled "The Perfect Storm" that demonstrated how the three greatest dangers: economic decline, dwindling natural resources and climate change worked together to build a civilization ending storm. Here we pointed out how recession, political unrest, terrorism, weather extremes, political turmoil, epidemics and other growing problems are symptoms of this more massive storm. Finally in early 2014 we published the "Threat Matrix" where we assigned (best guess) probabilities to various disasters. While it was impossible to predict exactly when and how things would start to come apart it was certain that (1) there were so many bad things coming that some of them would happen to you and (2) that ultimately so many bad things would happen that the entire social/economic system would begin to break down. At this writing we can clearly see the beginning of that process.

The "Disaster Matrix" is so complex that no article could possibly cover all of its aspects and details, but we can look at some of the elements and see how they will affect the coming months and years. Mathematicians found that there is no mathematical way to predict the future position of multiple interrelated forces, so predicting what kind of world we will live in 10-20-30 years from now based on the effects of interrelated social, economic and natural forces would be madness. So while chaos is predictable the products of chaos are not. With that in mind let's look at a few of the current players and situations.

Drugs and Drug Cartels

Drugs and Drug Cartels are usually not considered as survival issues or contributors to (TETWAWKI) world catastrophe, but they are a factor in causing economic and social decline and will be predatory in a future apocalyptic world. Drugs are a huge drain on the economy of American and many other nations' economies. They have institutionalize ignorance and poverty in many American cities and most 3rd world nations. While misguided populations demonstrate against guns and the police, the cartels kill or ruin millions of children each year. They manage hundreds of thousands of gang member solders on our streets. The poverty, chaos and unhealthy drug usage they produce will be a major factor in the spread of epidemics and civil disorder in the years to come.

The Middle East and Religious Extremism

Religion by definition is not subject to logical analysis. It is based on belief. Religious intolerance and hatred are strongly rooted in the Middle East. Generally these hatreds have manifested themselves as internal conflicts and minor wars among various factions. In recent times Israel has provided a focus point on which many factions could unite. Americas support for Israel made us the number-one target for terrorist. The chaos in the Middle East was bound to sort out into a dominating force. Unfortunately ISIS rises with a positive vision for an Islamic caliphate state. We must understand how attractive this vision is to millions of poor, displaced and confused Arabs. This is exactly how Nazism rose in Germany. At best we can look forward to a massive and perpetual (no "mission accomplished") war in the Middle East from Turkey to Pakistan. If ISIS manages to overthrow Saudi Arabia they will be able to control who gets oil and what currency it is bought in. Simply put: if the US Dollar is not the oil buying currency it has very little value. Then it goes to its real value at something less than ten cent. This what ISIS means when they threaten to bring down the United States.

The Economy and the Federal Reserve

For those who don't know: The Federal Reserve is not part of the federal government and is not a reserve. The FED is a banking entity chartered by the US government to manage the money supply and thereby the economy. Under their management you dollar has lost over 90% of its buying power and the disparity between the middle class and the very rich has grown tremendously. It is run by (and for) the major banks and has vast powers of economic and political intimidation. The FEDs policies have resulted in bigger and bigger debts for the American people and bigger and bigger economic disasters that ruin most citizens but enrich the bankers. While revocation of their charter and return of these powers to congress would be painful, such a move would stabilize the economy, lower taxes and insure general prosperity. Unfortunately, no politician (even the President) would dare challenge the FED. Therefor we can be assured that debt and inflation will continue to total economic collapse.

Disease, Health and Epidemics

The worsening world economics, growing populations and declining resources continue to spawn more and more epidemics and health crises in the third world and so called developing countries. The increasing frequency of natural disasters, droughts and floods only worsens famines and disease. Desperation then generates more wars and violence that again increases the health problems. Ultimately these diseases and the violence and economic displacement they cause must spread to even the most developed nations. Eventually (not too long) significant multiple epidemics must devastate the third world (reduce populations by 50%+) and ravage even the US (reduce population by 20-30%). The economic and political impact can only be imagined.

Energy and Natural Resources Depletion

Although often denied, all world resources are finite. Simply put: if you keep using up something that is in limited supply you will eventually use it all up. The use of petroleum, natural gas, and rare-earth minerals (critical to technology) has increased massively. We are well past the 50% used up point with oil and natural gas and China controls the dwindling supply of rare-earth minerals. New technology has found ways to delay the inevitable, but not replace our energy sources on anything near our future needs. Costs will go up and up as supplies get harder to get. At some point (10-20-30-50 years) the rate of population growth and demanded will exceed the supply at any cost. Simply put: the projected population of 2090 cannot possibly be sustained, warmed, moved and fed on what will remain of the petroleum supply and any so called alternative energy sources. Fortunately or unfortunately the other issues will significantly reduce the population by then.

The Foreast and Conflicts

As America's economic and political situation declines we can expect old conflicts between, China, Japan, and India to return. China will certainly retake control of the "China" sea and come into conflict with Japan, the Philippines and Taiwan. Being that we have a massive debt to China any involvement will be a losing situation for the USA. China has no interest in invading the US or in crippling its best customer, but it does have all the cards in any regional conflict.

Separatism and Revolution

The 20th century was a period of unification and centralization, but the 21st century will be one of disunity and separatism. These trends are supported by modern technology and communications that support non-bordered decentralization. Ethnic, religious and economic interests are often in conflict with existing national policies and borders. Old European and Middle Eastern regions are again rising to assert independence or self-rule. These conflicts range from protests and plebiscites to outright civil wars. The "United" States is not necessarily immune to these forces. We see states again talking about secession or resisting federal mandates. Even counties ignoring federal and state laws. The internet is creating borderless states and alternative currencies. We can anticipate all sorts of Machiavellian alliances and plots as this trend continues. Truly the end of the world as you know it.

The Internet Effect

Recent events in Ferguson Missouri and the growing number of flash mob lootings throughout the US demonstrates how the internet can instantly disseminate false and misleading information and/or organize criminal activities and civil disorder faster than the authorities can respond. Once a false idea is planted and a mob is formed, no amount of facts or reason can restore order. Every incident or issue can now be exploded into civil disorder and public chaos. This in-turn will further damage the economy and polarize the society. Law and order will become more difficult and public safety is further eroded in every community.

Big Brother vs Freedom

It is paradoxical that the technology that has broken some many boundaries and promoted so much freedom is also the greatest tool for information control and privacy invasion. The battle between the centralized state and special interests and the decentralized internet and non-government organizations will go on as long as this technology exists. The internet may become so chaotic and rife with criminals and government interference that it become inoperable or at least unattractive for most transactions. A massive cyber war or electromagnetic pulse may even knock the whole system out. There are already groups of "Darkers" who simply do not use cell phones, internet, credit cards our other tractable systems. The proliferation of cameras and the possibilities of drones and robots is even more serious than on-line issues. The worst problem is that the folks who cause the chaos will use it to justify monitoring your every move and controlling your communications and economy. None of this is going to make true survival and safety any easier.

Shifting Climate and Critical Needs

We hear a lot of arguments about climate shift and global warming. Actually it does not matter much who or what caused it. Even if it is caused by carbon emissions it is unlikely China and India are going to suddenly go green. The climate is changing and will continue to change for an indeterminate time period. Even minor climate shifts have trends impact on society. Historically even minor climate changes have caused: massive famines, wars over water and land resources, massive migrations and political upheavals. Any of this sound familiar? Rising temperatures equal more energy in the atmosphere. More energy creates more violent storms and unstable weather. Again: familiar? Of course all of this worsens the economy and health issues and uses up more resources.

Terrorism and Guerilla Warfare

Separatist movements, political extremists, religious fanatics, and crime cartels all practice various forms of asymmetric warfare. Asymmetric warfare avoids direct battles and territorial bounders in favor of hit and run tactics using low tech weapons against an enemy's people, economy and sense of security. Large well established nations are good a symmetric/traditional warfare where their planes, tanks and heavy weapons can win battles. But such countries have vulnerable infrastructures, agricultural regions, industries and populations that are easy targets for asymmetric war weapons. As climate, food, economic and other situations worsted, we can expect groups practicing this kind of warfare to multiply. While none of them may win a clear victory, the combined effect of constant, bombs, sabotage, hacking, biological attacks and other tactics will be to drain the strength of the great nations and hasten there down-fall. Think about the barbarians sacking Rome.

Wild Cards and Bolts out of the Blue

Even if you could predict how all of these situations will effect each other and the world you live in there are always wildcard event such as earthquakes, the rise of madmen, the quirks of human greed, hubris or just stupidity. The more you depend in things being normal or on being dependent, the more susceptible you are to the ravages of an unpredictable world.

Conclusions

What were predictions in our articles of 2008 and 2011 are realities today. At this writing we have at least two epidemics two major hurricanes, 6 recent tornadoes, dozens of major forest fires (drought) several huge long period droughts, riots in several major cities around the world, territorial conflicts in the Ukraine, active wars in Afghanistan, Syria, Iraq. And about a dozen other countries. Brewing unrest throughout Eastern Europe. Massive economic equality, an unsustainable national dept. and cascading world unemployment all in a more and more hostile climate. Other than that, everything is just fine! Yes, that is chaos and it is going to continue for the foreseeable future. All kinds of expected and unexpected dangers and real disasters will pop up like whack-a-mole, but there will be more moles than you can possibly whack.

Recommendations

Now if we were in the business of selling stuff or taking political advantage of the situations, we would tell you that (1) we know what will happen and (2) that if you just go along with our program we can assure that you will be okay. Anyone that does tell you (1 and 2) that is ether up to no good or stupid. Chios is by definition, unpredictable. Therefore exact defenses and counter actions are only best-guess efforts. It can be determined with reasonable certainty that (1) the existing life essential (e.g. food, water, fuel, protection, medical) services are likely to fail partially or totally and (2) Most people and families will be caught in one or more life threatening (riot, assault, fire, storm, etc.) situation within the next 5-10 or 15 years. Ultimately lone survivors will be hard-pressed to sustain life and freedom without a network of likeminded and equally capable individuals, families and groups within their region. It is in the best interest of preparedness and self-reliance oriented people to advocate, educate and organize to expand preparedness and self-reliance as the existing system fade and fail. While there is no doubt that the "world as we know it" is falling apart our focus should be on salvaging the best people and the most important values for the world as it will become. We need to think of ourselves as "new Americans" not just survivor.

Ebola Part Two

By James C. Jones, EMT/CHCM

If you think the recent Ebola epidemic is over then you probably think that "denial" is a river in Egypt.

If we are lucky enough to have survived the circus of incompetents, lies and errors that resulted from the introduction of this deadly disease into our Country we have only seen the first phase of this threat. The idea that the federal government would put the American public at risk for the sake of political correctness is appalling. The CDC and the politicians will continue to reassure the public and reinforce denial while avoiding the real possibilities that this minor epidemic portends. Even these few cases sent shudders through the stock market and created confusion and discontent in all medical facilities. While it is true that Ebola is not an airborne virus there are plenty of ways to spread it intentionally. Surely the terrorists of all kinds have noted the effects of Ebola and are planning to use it as soon as possible.

Scenario #1

The people of Liberia and other Ebola infested areas are desperately poor and many are radicalized Muslims. They have access to plenty of blood and other contaminated fluids from Ebola victims. Such fluids can be easily gathered, preserved and transported to the US. Once here it can be dispersed in many ways where the infected people will never know they are infected until they have spread the virus further. Let's say they just vaporized blood over a crowd on New Year's Eve or maybe spread less visible fluids around shopping malls or airports. Weeks later hundreds of cases pop up. By the time we realize that it's not just a flu epidemic there are thousands of exposed secondary contacts. Massive isolation is necessary. People stop going to school, stores, public events and even their jobs. The stock exchange drops dramatically. Serious shortages and even civil disorder could result. There would probably be 3 to 4 deaths from the secondary effects for every death from the actual disease. Whether-or-not the outbreak could be controlled short of a major population reduction is debatable.

Suppose terrorist deliberately infect a group of suicide bombers and have them detonate in crowded areas. That would certainly spread bodily fluids all over hundreds of unsuspecting and unprotected people. Then the police, fire, EMS and other emergency responders would also be infected. Even if the presents of Ebola is detected early it would be difficult to prevent secondary and tertiary contamination. If the Ebola contamination was not identified very quickly the same results as scenario #1 would result.

The terrorists we face are intelligent, imaginative and fanatical. To hope that they will ignore this opportunity to kill "infidels" and do serious damage to America is wishful thinking indeed. For protection we are dependent on the folks who (1) can't stop thousands from crossing our borders illegally, (2) never imagined the enemy using passenger planes as weapons and (3) failed to notice the rise of ISIS in the Middle East.

Now is the time to redouble preparedness programs and education at all levels. The prepared family must be prepared to sustain water, food, fire suppression, defense and medical care isolated from and possible defending against outside intrusion and interference for extended periods. Additionally: it will be necessary to protect against respiratory, and contact contamination if and when it is necessary to interact with others. Knowing how to decontaminate effectively will be critical. Obviously going to the clinic or hospital for other ailments or injuries will be out of the question once Ebola is spreading. Stocking up on medications and learning more advanced medical techniques will be more important than ever.

The Survival Micro-Kit

I am sure most of you are well acquainted with the many survival kits that have been developed over the past ten years. Lets review them briefly, remembering that the smaller the kit the more skill and imagination is needed to survive with it.

Survival Packs are intended for the home or vehicle. It is a backpack or combination of packs and web gear weighing at least 15 to 20 pounds. These kits contain just about everything (food, shelter, medicine, weapons) to facilitate long-term survival on the move.

Compact Survival Kits are usually belt mounted or fanny-packs that can fit into glove compartments, briefcases or lunchboxes. These kits contain basic items to get you through short-term (1-2 day) emergencies.

Mini Survival Kits are pocket-sized collections of items you would like to have in an emergency. A tiny flashlight, matches, whistle, etc. The value of this is in the fact that it will always be with you.

Storm Kits consist of some form of shelter (plastic sheet, survival blanket) fire starter and maybe some sugar or candy.

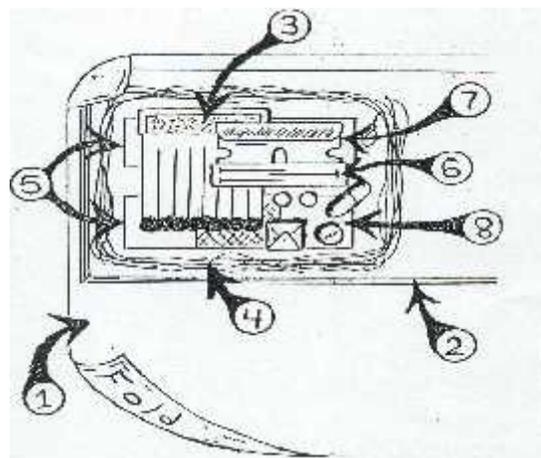

The Micro-Kit is intended for beginners who want to have something on hand without spending a lot of money and for those with some survival training as a backup kit or a gift kit for friends. The Micro-Kit fits nicely in your wallet or purse.

Making the Micro-Kit

You will need the following materials to make your kit(s):

1. Heavy Duty Aluminum Foil, 12"x 8"
2. Wax Paper, 4"x6"
3. Book matches, 1 layer from a book with the sticker glued on*
4. Snare or picture wire, 3 feet coiled to 2 inch diameter
5. Band-Aids
6. Straight pins or safety pins, 2 or 3
7. Single edge razor blade,
8. Pain medication or prescription medication (your option)

*Waterproof camping matches are better.

Packaging the Kit: Be sure to cover the razor blade with cardboard so it won't cut its way out and tape the pins next to it for the same reason. The pills should be wrapped in plastic and sealed from moisture. An extra wrapping for the matches is also a good idea. Finally wrap everything up in the wax paper and then the foil to form a flat package about 2 ½ x 3 1/3 inches.

You now have a kit that can provide signaling, light, heat, medical aid, repairs and other survival needs at a very basic level. Don't leave home without it!

PREPPER & SHOOTER MAGAZINE BOOSTS LIVE FREE

The current issue of Prepper Shooter Magazine on newsstands throughout the USA and Canada features a full two-page article about Live Free USA. The article explains the history, mission and programs of our organization with photos of various events and activities. This is a great promotion and a great opportunity for members and chapters to demonstrate Live Free's national reputation and credibility. Shooter & Prepper magazine is on-target in its focus on shooters and preppers as most shooters (e.g. target, hunting, defense) are at least basic preppers and most preppers are at least gun owners. Live Free USA was organized from a gun club that morphed into outdoor survival and then general preparedness and self-reliance. We still exhibit at gun shows and work with sports clubs and gun rights groups that have mutual interests in prepping. The publishers of this magazine have clearly recognized the importance of hard-copy printed survival publications and "boots on the ground" face-to-face organizing and training. We strongly recommend that our readers look for this magazine at your local newsstand and sporting goods store. If they do not carry it, ask them to do so. This issue includes a good variety of well-illustrated articles on outdoor survival, emergency preparedness and firearms related to survival

HOT CAN™ Self-Heating Beverages

Hot Can™ products are foam insulated cans about the size of a normal 16 oz beverage can, but they contain just 7.1 Oz of beverage. The remaining weight and space is taken up by the heat producing chemical pack. The ones I bought were on sale at a sporting goods store for $2.75 each. The label claims that you can have a hot beverage in just 3-minutes. I bought the hot chocolate and the chicken soup. They also offer tomato soup and caf'e latte. The can instructions say that it should not be stored or activated above 90 degrees or below 50 degrees. One of my issues with all "self-heating" systems is that they work poorly in cold weather when you need them most. If this product has to start from a near frozen state you'd be lucky to get even a lukewarm drink. The actual drinks are fairly tasty and provide about 120 calories. The heat generator is activated by pressing down hard on the bottom of the can and shaking it for 30 seconds. Although the claim is “a hot beverage in 3-minutes) it took 5-minutes for the green (hot) and then the red (very hot) indicators on the can to turn colors. The cans I used got to about 150-degrees on my thermometer. The sipping cover prevents spillage and makes the drink last a bit longer. A side benefit is that the can was warming my hands.

These would be handy to have in a winter field pack or a winter vehicle kit to stave off hypothermia. While a mini-stove, Sterno™ or candles used to heat up larger amounts of hot drinks would be far more useful in many cases, these Hot Cans can be used very quickly and without regards to wind, rain and snow. On the negative side: you get only a small portion of a “warm” beverage for the weight and space in your kit and the remaining can and spent chemical pack is an environmental issue. My best recommendation is for your vehicle kit in winter only. They do have expiration dates and 90-degree storage limits so you’d have to use them up every spring. You also have to keep them from freezing in your vehicle so you can’t leave them there in mid-winter.

Hot Cans™ are available at sporting goods stores and at www.hot-can.us
